Sharing Christmas wishes

Eight-year-old Ava Moss and 4-year-old Ari Moss share their Christmas wishes with Mrs. Claus and Santa following a ceremony Dec. 5 that lit up Memorial Chapel and Zais Park for the holidays. Ava asked for a dirt bike to race and a guitar with an amplifier, and Ari asked for Minnie Mouse.

In addition to visits and photos with Santa and Mrs. Claus, event attendees also heard performances by school choirs and members of the 312th Army Band and were treated to hot cocoa and candy canes by the Fort Leavenworth Commissary and Post Exchange.

The family of a deployed soldier helped turn on the lights during the ceremonial lighting of the park and chapel.

CAC CG explains command philosophy at town hall

Combined Arms Command and Fort Leaven-Commanding worth General Lt. Gen. James Isenhower III met with service members and civilians assigned to CAC for an introductory town hall Dec. 5 at the Lewis and Clark Center. Isenhower, who took command in mid-November, shared his command philosophy during the town hall, and his remarks were followed by a question-and-answer session with in-person and online audiences.

Four things

Isenhower said his command/career philosophy boils down to essentially four things: treat people with dignity and respect; ask if each decision is legal, moral, ethical and safe; care enough to speak up; and prepare to fight.

"In the profession at large, we don't know when it's coming, but it will come again," he said, recalling a study that found there were only about 16 years in history when there wasn't a war. "It's a fundamentally human characteristic. It doesn't mean I endorse it, but we have to prepare these young men and women to be ready to fight. That's our obligation, so let's prepare to fight.

"Treat people with dignity and respect," he reiterated. "When you make a decision, make sure it's legal, moral, ethical and safe - I got your back. Care enough to speak up. Intervene when you see something you know shouldn't be happening. And then lastly, let's all prepare to fight."

Iterate rapidly

Isenhower used the phrase "iterate rapidly" to explain what needs to be done, essentially moving quickly from concept to implementation with increased speed, with experts weighing in to manage and

Wass de Czege, founder of SAMS, dies at age 84

by Chris Tiberi. Used with permission of Milam Funeral and Cremation Services

Huba Wass de Czege, the third son to Count Albert Wass de Czege and Baroness Eva Siemers, was born on Aug. 13, 1941, in Kolozsvár, Transylvania, Hungary. "Yoda," as he was affectionately known by his students and followers, was a shining light in the lives of all who had the privilege of knowing him. His journey on this earth was one marked by love, compassion and unwavering faith in humanity. His passing has left a void in the hearts of his family, friends and many more whose lives he touched. We ask that you remember him not for the way his life ended, but for the way he lived it, and for the profound impact he had on the lives of those in his orbit.

Huba is survived by his loving wife and soulmate, Sherrie Patrick; his daughter, Maggie; his son, Matt; and his two living brothers, Geza and Endre. He also leaves behind a host of nieces and nephews, grandchildren and cousins who shared in his joyful spirit.

After his graduation from Gainesville High School, Huba entered the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, New York, and graduated in 1964. His legend as one of history's greatest military theorists began. He would serve two tours of combat in Vietnam; command at platoon, company, battalion and brigade levels; and graduate evading From clutches of advancing Soviet forces in World War II as a 3-year old boy, to the bloody fighting in the jungles of Vietnam as a young Army officer — where he earned the Silver Star Medal (our nation's third-highest award for heroism) and five Bronze Star Medals (two for valor) — to the halls of NATO — where his impeccable logic and reasoned judgment led the team that helped to negotiate the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe, which contributed to the fall of the Soviet Union — Wass de Czege was seemingly destined to become a hero, an intellectual giant and a great friend.

Those who knew Huba will remember him best for his love of humanity, his kindness and his humility. He leaves a lasting impact on all who crossed his path. As per Huba's wishes, his remains will be cremated at Milam Funeral and Cremation Services, Gainesville, Florida, and will await services with full military honors at Fort Myer, Virginia, followed by inurnment at Arlington National Cemetery at a date to be determined. SAMS idea began in Vietnam

FROM THE LAMP Archives May 28, 2009 issue of the Fort Leavenworth Lamp

Compiled by Melissa Bower from "SAMS...The First 25 Years, A Historical Overview" by retired Col. Kevin Benson

Two retired general officers trace the beginnings of the School of Advanced Military Studies to a boat trip on the Yangtze River in China. It was in 1981, and then-Lt. Gen. William R. Richardson and then-Col. Huba Wass de Czege discussed plans for an advanced education program to an elite group of Command and General Staff College students. In 1983, Wass de Czege published "Army Staff College Level Training Study," which focused on the need for officers to understand the theory of warfare. CGSC had been a two-year course before World War II, and Wass de Czege wrote the "two-year Leavenworth men," made a difference in staff and command positions.

Wass de Czege said his idea began "...back on a hill in Vietnam wondering why all field-grade officers above me hadn't a clue about what they were sending me out to do."

On Dec. 28, 1982, Gen. Glen Otis, commanding general, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, approved a one-year extension of CGSC for selected officers. The first course began in June 1983.

Wass de Czege was the first director of SAMS. Then-Lt. Col. Hal Winton and Lt. Col. Doug Johnson constructed the course, using Wass de Czege's vision to produce "broadly educated, tactical and operational planners and thinkers." Winton, Wass de Czege and Johnson all had advanced degrees, served in combat in Vietnam and had taught at the U.S. Military Academy.

The first two civilian instructors hired were Robert Epstein and James Schneider. They wrote the school's curriculum. Epstein completed his 25th year teaching at SAMS in 2009.

The first class of 13 students graduated May 24, 1984. The following year, 23 graduated. During the next 16 academic years, SAMS graduated 48 students each year, divided into four seminars of 12 students. In 1987-88, SAMS graduated its first sister service members: three U.S. Air Force officers. Maj. Linda Linden was the first woman SAMS graduate in 1989, and Lt. Cmdr. Jonathon James was the first Navy graduate in 1990.

Wass de Czege, now a retired brigadier general (in 2009), said the program originally began as an experiment to improve the education of officers.

He said it was during Operation Just Cause and Operation Desert Storm that SAMS graduates distinguished themselves as advanced planners and creative prob-

"The performance of graduates during those two early events really built up the reputation of the school," he said.

In 1992 during a meeting of the committee on Armed Services Military Education Panel in Washington, D.C., Rep. Ike Skelton praised the school, saying, "We all know that the real stamp of approval came when Gen. (Norman) Schwarzkopf requested SAMS graduates, sometimes referred to as 'Jedi Knights,' to be sent to his headquarters in Riyadh (Saudi Arabia) to assist in developing the campaign plan."

In 1995, international officers from Norway and Canada joined the ranks of SAMS graduates.

> in 2001. In 2007, SAMS added a seventh seminar during the winter CGSC cycle. As of May 2009 when this article was first published, SAMS had eight seminars over two ac> ademic cycles and a ninth seminar planned for July 2009. In May 2009, 106 students graduated. In its first 25 years, SAMS graduated 1,747 students.

Editor's Update:

Emilio Gutierrez

As of December 2025, SAMS boasts 3,375 Advanced Military Studies Program graduates and 420 Advanced Strategic Leadership Studies Program graduates, with eight AMSP seminars and one ASLSP seminar, and SAMS' Advanced Strategic Planning and Policy Program has 13 cohorts, with 96 doctorates awarded thus far.

CGSC Quality Assurance Office uses Al innovations for improvement, education

by Jessica Brushwood/Army University Public Affairs

The Command and General Staff College is spearheading new practices and technologies to ensure America's warfighters receive the most relevant and rigorous professional military education possible.

The Quality Assurance Office is leading several initiatives, revolutionizing the ability to maintain and improve the curriculum through critical, data-driven insights for informed decision-making across the institution.

A significant advancement is the introduction of new artificial intelligence data workflows, designed internally by QAO.

These substantially decrease the time it takes to analyze large amounts of data from surveys and student writing, validated through testing by the Department of Distance Education in leadership and history common core courses.

Using the AI workflows has enabled ongoing program improvethrough quick identification of trends in large data sets obtained through curriculum outcome surveys.

Further, they reduce human bias in analysis, allowing accurate sentiment analysis, predictive analyses and optimization of resource allocation. The tool has enabled the expansion of feedback reach for a more holistic view of the impact and effectiveness of the curricu-

"We do a two- and four-year graduate survey, reported twice a year to the command so they understand the impact the curriculum has had at those career milestones," said Dr. Forrest

Woolley, director, QAO. "We also gather feedback from senior leaders and general officers, as well as pre-command course battalion and brigade commanders to understand their perceptions of CGSC graduates: their strengths and weaknesses, and how we can enhance the curriculum to better prepare them to lead effectively."

The new program analyses and efforts to streamline surveys increased response rate to more than 90 percent for the first time.

"We gather enough good information to make data-informed recommendations to the command for improvements," Woolley explained. Acknowledging that people often fear AI will replace their jobs, he emphasized the importance of human touch. "We still have to read and review all of the outputs to validate

AI is giving us the correct narrative and findings," he said.

This is also true of the Guided Analytical Recommended Feedback tool, or GARF, which was developed in-house by Woolley and Dr. Thom Crowson, a CGSC assistant professor. GARF, which was launched and piloted in August, helped military instructors double their grading output in a single course during the furlough, with that number expected to increase over While not a grading program, GARF's recommended feedback, which is nested in the course rubric, decreased the time it took to analyze and grade papers by approximately 55 percent. It generates two to three pages of curriculum-based, individualized feedback in roughly six seconds, which instructors tailor to the individual student.

Instructors who used GARF found that it gave them the ability to provide more detailed, accurate and relevant feedback to students more quickly, freeing up time for mentoring, engaging with students and class preparation.

"It's still the instructor's responsibility to read the feedback, review the paper, and then adjust the feedback before determining the grade," Woolley said.

The prompts, designed by Woolley and Crowson, are critical to the quality, accuracy and relevance of the output and enable GARF to deliver more accurate and useful assessments, which have been found to be 90-95 percent accurate.

"Information generated by GARF should be treated as a resource rather than definitive guidance. GARF is just one tool in the instructor's toolkit. When the output is paired with the critical thinking and experience provided by a seasoned military professional, it becomes a powerful tool to support student learning," Crowson said.

He emphasized that the more personalized and relevant feedback helps students develop the critical skills required of fieldgrade officers.

"This integration is especially valuable as the military faces resource constraints and expanding mission requirements," he said.

Other initiatives by QAO this year include the launch of a new Armywide survey system, the development of the Army's first Triennial Program Review, and establishment of rigor factors for leader information to facilitate a common understanding of how to measure, review and analyze data-driven assessments for continuous improvement.

For more detailed information on GARF, read "Achieving cognitive overmatch through human AI teaming," which will be published Dec. 17 in the Field Artillery Pro-Bulletin fessional https://www.dvidshub.net/publication/1332/field-artillery-professional-bulletin/page/1.

MAHC expands appointment access with 24/7 online booking

by Christina Yager/Munson Army Health Center Public Affairs Officer

Munson Army Health Center is testing online appointment booking through the MHS GENESIS Patient Portal to provide patients 24/7 appointing access.

"We are excited to offer this online service to our beneficiaries," said Col. Jolanda L.J. Walker, MAHC director. "The 24/7 online appointment booking system empowers patients to take control of their healthcare and manage their appointments on their own schedule."

The online booking feature allows patients to schedule and manage appointments at their convenience, anytime, day or

"Using the MHS GENESIS Patient Portal, our beneficiaries can view available primary care appointment slots, select a time that works for them, and even cancel or reschedule appointments as needed," said Toni McCall, chief of MAHC's Business Operations Division. This enhancement significantly expands access to primary care and reduces the need to call the appointment line during peak

Munson began testing online booking in the fall with members of the Patient and Family Partnership Council to give the staff

a chance to learn the system. "We are actively working to optimize the online booking system and appreciate your patience as we navigate this additional service. We encourage you to provide feedback about your experience so we can continue to improve the system," Walker said.

For those who prefer to call, MAHC's appointment line remains available on weekdays at 913-684-6250 from 7:15 a.m. to 3:45 p.m.

"With the addition of online booking, we expect to see reduced call agent wait times for patients who do phone in to schedule appointments," McCall said.

During the initial test phase, more than 180 appointments were booked using the patient portal, reducing demand on the call

Tips for online appointment booking

To ensure a smooth experience when booking appointments online, keep the following in mind:

• Know your provider You will need to know the name of your

Primary Care Manager (PCM) or specialist Verify location

when scheduling your appointment. This information can be found in the portal. Ensure that you are booking your appointment at MAHC to avoid scheduling errors. When searching by location, enter "Ft. Leavenworth." Searching "Fort Leavenworth," "Munson," etc. will result in "no results found." Additional comments

In the additional comments field, provide as much information about your appointment need as possible. This will allow nursing staff to ensure patients are appropriately scheduled.

"We are only booking in-person appointments through the portal, which is the bulk of our primary care appointments," Walker said. "As we phase this new system in, we look forward to learning more and maximizing appointment booking capabilities through the platform."

Combined Arms Command and Fort Leaven-Commanding worth General Lt. Gen. James Isenhower III shares his command philosophy with town hall attendees Dec. 5 in Eisenhower Auditorium at the Lewis and Clark Center. Isenhower assumed command in mid-November.

embrace risk.

"I'm going to ask you to do things faster, find a more efficient way," he said. "What I need is the feedback from the experts to say, 'We can do that, but here's where there's risk.' There might be a process that normally took us 30 days, and we realize with the increased digitization of our military and the capabilities we're enjoying right now that we can do it probably faster."

Isenhower told the audience that he will always listen, and he said he encourages subordinates to try to change his mind when warranted.

"If I disagree with you, I will tell you. Ask somebody who's worked with me before, and I'm going to tell you why I'm not going down that course because I want you to know my rationale. I don't just listen to you and say, 'Okay, thank you,' and move out and go make a decision and don't come back at you, but I want that dialogue," he said. "In my experience, dialoguing across a command is really important so that we make the best decisions together. Ultimately, as commander, it's my decision, and I'll be responsible — I should be responsible for it — but I need your input to make sure we're making the right decisions."

Drive change

Isenhower said he will change something if he thinks it is wrong, but he won't do so without asking for counsel.

"And right now, the counsel is you all and those who know the problem set better than I. So, I don't want you to think I'm going to come in and blow things up," he said, noting that the Army and Department of War have been experiencing the turbulence of change, some at the prerogative of leaders without seemingly much analysis.

"Right now, I think many of you might agree with me that our country is going through significant change; our Department of War is going through significant change; the Department of Army is engaged on a massive transformation, unlike anything we've seen probably in about four and a half, five decades — and so I realize there can be change fatigue," he said.

Isenhower said he has always endeavored to be a change agent, but not change that causes chaos. He stressed the importance for effective decisions made with haste, especially today as adversaries in Ukraine are combatting new techniques in a mere three weeks. He called the speed needed to adapt "eye-opening," and said that need becomes even more relevant as AI is increasingly embraced worldwide.

Building trust

Isenhower assured the town hall attendees that he trusts them to make the right decisions.

"You're sitting in this room for a reason. You're in the position you're in for a reason," he said. "And if we wait for permission to do things, we're more like the adversary that we're trying to train our men and women to destroy and call upon to do so. I don't want you to wait. I want to exercise discipline and initiative."

CAC is currently experiencing considerable growth, from 8,000 to 58,000 in personnel and $.8 billion to $4 billion in budget, he said, and with a headquarters unlike any other in the Army, every soldier will be touched by it at some point in their

"We're going to affect not just 58,000 people, but their families, so now you're talking around 200,000, if not more. And then, potentially, the entire Army, 1.2 million, their families — you're probably talking 3 to 4 million. That's a terrific responsibility."

In addition to effective and swift problem-solving, Isenhower said it is important to ask others what they need to help them succeed, and to embrace families and build enworth. The local police department in Lansing, Kansas, initiated an investigation that revealed he had sexually abused two of the victims. A concurrent investigation from the Department of the Army Criminal Investigation Division's Fort Leavenworth Resident Unit revealed he had also sexually abused two other victims.

In the spring of 2025, the Leavenworth County Attorney's Office prosecuted Nauman for the youngest two victims. He was acquitted by a jury in that case.

Shortly thereafter, the Army Office of Special Trial Counsel preferred charges in May 2025 for the sexual abuse of all four victims. The abuse took place from June through July of 2012 at Fort Riley, Kansas, and Fort Drum, New York; March 2020 through December 2021 in Lansing, Kansas; and July 2021 in DeSoto Kansas and Kansas City, Kansas.

All four victims testified against Nauman during his trial.

"The verdict and sentence in this case demonstrate that no rank can shield a criminal from accountability. It honors the courage of the victims who came forward and placed their trust in the Army and the military justice system," said Capt. Angelique J. Margve, prosecutor, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Fort Leavenworth. "Justice has finally been served for this family."

"The trust placed in us by the family, to go through this process a second time, reinforces the importance of our mission - and our calling as prosecutors: to be a voice for the voiceless, to seek the truth, and protect the most vulnerable members of our society," said Maj. Jonathan H. Mathis, prosecutor, Fourth Circuit, Army

"This soldier abused his position of trust and sexually assaulted his own family," said Special Agent in Charge Derek Tilton of Army CID's Central Field Office. "His conviction is a testament to our agency's resolve in investigating anyone who would abuse the most precious and vulnerable members of our communities, our children."

Nauman will service his confinement at the U.S. Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth. Upon release from prison, he will be required to register as a sex offender and will be subject to federal and state sex offender registration requirements.

The Army Office of Special Trial Counsel is comprised of specially trained military lawyers, legal professionals and support staff responsible for the expert and independent prosecution of murder, sexual assault, domestic violence, child abuse, kidnapping and other serious criminal offenses. Headquartered at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, OSTC has eight regional headquarters that oversee 28 field offices located across the country, to include Europe and Korea. Pet of the Week: Artie Artie (Artemis) is a 1-yearold female mixed-breed dog available for adoption at the Fort Leavenworth Stray Facility. She has already been spayed, vaccinated and microchipped. The adoption fee for a dog is $155, which helps cover some of the care received. E-mail fortleavenworthstrayfacility@gmail.com for an adoption application and call 913-335-0788 for an appointment. Military affiliation is not required to adopt from the Fort Leavenworth Stray Facility. Visit www.FLSF. petfinder.com for adoptable pet profiles.

FLSF, at 510 Organ Ave., is open 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday; 9 a.m. to noon the second Saturday of the month; and by appointment for pre-approved adopters. Call 913-335-0788 for appointment or more infor-Volunteers are needed to help cover pet care shifts, walk dogs, clean kennels and more. Foster homes for adoptable pets are also needed.

To apply to volunteer with the Fort Leavenworth Stray Facility, https://vmis.armyfamilywebportal. com/, enter ZIP code 66027, then search for "stray animal facility."
