AMPO program guarantees military spouses jobs after PCS

by Mark R. W. Orders-Woempner/USAFMCOM Public Affairs

INDIANAPOLIS - Military families face numerous challenges during relocations, and a recent U.S. Army Financial Management Command policy to help them is paying big dividends in the areas of readiness, family support, and employee relations.

Promising continuity in career paths, the recent initiative ensures Army Military Pay Office employees who relocate with their service member spouses during permanent changes of station will maintain their positions within the command.

"Military spouses face unique challenges in obtaining and maintaining employment due to the PCS cycle, and must relocate regularly, sometimes with little-to-no notice," said Brig. Gen. Paige M. Jennings, US-AFMCOM commanding general, who originally signed the policy in November 2022. "As a large employer of military spouses, USAFMCOM recognizes these challenges and their sacrifices."

policy, Under this

AMPO employees who are moving with their military spouse to a new installation with a USAFMCOM presence are guaranteed employment with like-position and at the same grade at the new location's AMPO.

If the PCS move is to a location without a USAFM-COM presence, the employee will be placed in a leave without pay status, so they keep their employment status within the command.

The only stipulation to these guarantees is that the AMPO employee must be currently rated as "fully successful" in their duties and be without any pending disciplinary actions.

"When we hire people 'off the street,' they often don't know anything about the military, but the military spouses have an understanding of what our soldiers face, which increases their value to the AMPO team," said Susan Gillison, USAFMCOM Military Pay Operations director. "They don't have to learn it; they live it. They've experienced issues with pay, so they are more conscientious about their work and taking care of our military."

band's pay was so messed up that we only got a $200 paycheck, and for a family of four, that was not going to cut it," said Whitney Hartwell, Redstone Arsenal AMPO military pay technician, who is married to U.S. Army Capt. Hartwell, assistant project manager for acquisitions at the Army Program Executive Office Missiles and Space. "Knowing that I can help soldiers correct their pay, making sure they are getting their entitlements, and seeing that I can affect what's happening and get things fixed, that makes me happy."

Adding to readiness, the employment guarantee policy increased the number of military pay technicians available to support military pay, which allows them to resolve any issues and get back to the mission faster than ever. According to USAFM-COM data, prior to the policy's enactment, an average of 15 percent of the AMPO's positions were vacant. Since its enactment, that number shrank to 3 percent.

"When the AMPOs

added.

On top of their increased institutional knowledge and commitment, the program is also increasing military pay expertise. As the Army moves its soldiers from position to position to increase their experience and understanding, their AMPO employee spouses are receiving the same benefit.

"We go wherever our spouses go, and we use the knowledge from our previous locations, taking it forward," Hartwell said. "I've learned so much from both (Joint Base Lewis Mc-Chord) and Redstone; I feel like I'm a well-rounded technician."

Awareness TBI Awarene Month

Observations from MAHC's Concussion Clinic chief

by Dr. Patrick Armistead-Jehle/Concussion Clinic Chief, Munson Army Health

Traumatic brain injuries (TBIs) have garnered a notable amount of media attention, particularly over about the last decade. I have been engaged in the care and research of this injury for the better part of my 20-plus years of doctoring. As March is TBI Awareness Month, I wanted to pass along several observations.

· Not all brain injuries are created equal.

At the most elementary level, TBIs are divided into severity based on how long one is knocked out or how long one has a lack of memory after the injury event a state called post-traumatic amnesia. The least severe level is termed a mild TBI, which is also known as a concussion. The projected outcome following a TBI is heavily influenced by the initial severity of injury. For prognostic and treatment purposes, it is important to consider the severity of #### • TBIs are fairly common injuries, within and outside of the military.

Since 2000 there have been nearly 500,000 reported TBIs among military personnel. The vast majority of these (82 percent) are categorized as mild TBIs (a.k.a. concussions). Among civilians, the Brain Injury Association of American estimates that there are nearly 3 million TBIs a year in the United States, with the majority of these again being considered mild in severity.

· One does not need to be knocked out to have had a concussion.

The diagnosis of and the recognition that one has experienced a concussion is certainly made easier if the recipient loses consciousness. However, an alteration of consciousness after an external blow to the head, blast exposure, or rapid acceleration and deceleration of the head (such as a whiplash injury) qualifies for a concussive injury. Phrases such as "seeing stars," "feeling dazed and confused," or "clearing out the cobwebs" are all euphemisms that describe this experience.

Symptoms can be wide ranging and can vary from person to person.

I like to think of concussive symptoms as falling into three general categories: (1) Physical (e.g., headaches, dizziness, vertigo, insomnia, visual tracking problems); (2) cognition (e.g., poor memory, inattention, slowed processing speed); and (3) emotional (e.g., anxiety, irritability, depresbe different from person to person for evaluation following a sus-and even within the same person with different injuries; however, these generally develop quickly after the injury.

Dr. Patrick Armistead-Jehle, chief of the Concussion Clinic at Munson Army Health Center, uses a brain model while discussing concussion treatment Feb. 8, 2022, in his office at Gentry Clinic. Call the MAHC Appointment Line at 913-684-6250 to see a primary care provider, who can make referrals to the MAHC Concussion Clinic or specialized care if needed.

• The vast majority will experience a full recovery.

The exact time frame for recovery depends on a number of factors, but most people with this severity of injury get better within a few days to at most a few months. Of note, recovery following a moderate to severe brain injury (which is not considered a concussion) can last longer, and the probability of long-standing residual symptoms is higher.

Appropriate management of the concussive injury is essential to optimized outcomes.

While most people who experience a concussion will recover, management of this injury via a medical professional is incredibly important. The primary mechanism of this management is a graded return to physical and cognitive activities. In the past, many health care providers (and wellmeaning care takers) would recommend "cocooning therapy," which essentially equated to the patient being told to stay alone in a dark room with minimal stimulation until the concussive symptoms had abated. This has proven to be a rather ineffective treatment strategy. Current treatment starts with something akin to this, but within a day or two increasing activity levels are prescribed. Outcomes are optimized with such a protocol, and within military medicine we call this the Progressive Return to Activities (PRA). This is often done with adjunctive symptom management, but the PRA is the core of a concussion treatment plan.

sion). The mix of symptoms can medically mandated to present with age.

pected concussion.

Frequently, the military mind set to "drive on" prevents a service member from seeing a health care provider after a possible concussive injury; however, current policy dictates such evaluation, which should be initiated by the individual service member or leadership. Primary among the reasons for such an evaluation is to prevent a repeat injury while one is still in recovery from the initial concussion. Such an event will almost certainly result in a protracted period of recovery.

· When it comes to the longterm outcomes of repeated con-(to include sub-concussive exposures), the media is way in front of the sci-

One can scarcely turn on the news these days without seeing a reference to the purported dire long-term neurologic consequences of repeated brain injuries. Simply stated, at present, there is more we don't know than we do about this topic. Personally, I agree it is a bad idea to keep having brain injuries and if this situation can be prevented, one should. However, the notion that everyone who has had a history of concussions is destined to develop a crippling neurodegenerative disease is not supported by the current research. At present, the best advice I can give to those who have a history of repeat concussion and are concerned about such an outcome is to visit their primary care provider. Frequently, comorbid medical conditions can be addressed in primary care (or with a referral to a brain health specialist) that can improve the chances of optimizing current • For those in the military, it is functioning and cerebral heath

MAHC conducts car seat safety inspections

by Maria C. Yager/Munson Army Health Center Public Affairs Officer

Munson Army Health Center personnel conducted a car seat safety round-up March 21 in the health center parking lot.

Injuries suffered in motor vehicle crashes are one of the leading causes of death and serious injury among children in the United States.

Parents can reduce this risk by ensuring children are properly secured in a child safety seat or a seat belt.

"Studies have shown that children who are correctly using the appropriate restraint for their sizes and ages are at a significantly lower risk of sustaining serious or fatal injuries," said Jennifer Smith, a neuropsychometrist and certified child safety seat technician, assigned to the Concussion Clinic at Munson Army Health Center.

Smith and fellow team member Susan Landers, a registered nurse and nurse case manager assigned to MAHC's Behavioral Health Clinic, conducted the car seat safety round-up on Fort Leavenworth to help ensure children's safety. Participants came out to the health center parking lot in their personally owned vehicles so Smith and Landers, also CCSST qualified, could physically inspect installed car seats and give participants feedback.

"We are checking the car seat in the car and showing them how to install it correctly. Our goal is to make it so they are comfortable installing it into any car and they know what they are looking for to make sure it is installed properly," Smith said.

"Sometimes the baby may go in a car with mom, or dad or grandparents. Each time the car seat is moved to a different vehicle, it is important to make sure the car seat is installed correctly," Landers said.

In addition to checking that the car seat is installed correctly, parents and caregivers should also check how the straps are fitting the child because as children grow, the straps will need to be adjusted.

Car seats are designed to grow with a child, but at some point a child will outgrow his/her safety seat.

"We reiterate that children remain rear-facing for as long as possible," Smith

She suggested parents pick a car seat with the highest weight and height limit for rear-facing use because that is the safest position for little bodies in the event of a motor vehicle accident.

Each car seat is different, so Smith said that parents should look at the owner's manual, which will list the minimum and maximum weight and height of a child the car safety seat is intended for.

"You want the child to max one of those categories before moving up, so you don't move them on too early," she said.

Landers agreed, noting that all children are different.

"Some may be big for their age, others may be small, which is why we recommend using height or weight to determine when it is time to change seats."

Your child under age 1 should always ride in a rear-facing car seat in the back seat. There are different types of rear-facing car seats: Infant-only seats can only be used rear-facing. Ultimately, when parents or caregivers choose to move a child to the next size car safety seat, there are additional considera-

"A lot of times people don't know there is an expiration date on a car seat," Landers said. "Typically, that information may be found in the user manual, but in general a car seat should be retired about 10 years after the date it was manufactured because the integrity of the plastic breaks down over

At that point the car seat should be removed from service and broken down. This involves cutting and removing all straps and webbing and writing "trash, do not use" on the car seat shell before disposing in the trash. Some communities accept car seats to recycle the plastic to make resin for use in items like shampoo bottles, building materials and other components.

Car seats involved in an accident should not be reused, regardless of expiration date, even if it looks okay.

This is one reason Smith and Landers caution parents from placing children in used car seats.

"Unless you know the history of the seat, we don't recommend used car seats," Landers said, explaining that the seat might be beyond its life cycle or damaged and might not perform as intended in an accident.

Lastly, the MAHC team covered aftermarket accessories.

"A lot of parents will put up the mirrors and the hanging toys on and around the car seat but, in an accident or hard stop, those items can easily become projectiles, so we don't recommend those," Landers said. Visit https://munson.tricare.mil/Patient-Resources/Health-Services/Safety-Car-Seat-Install-and-Inspections for information on scheduling a car safety seat in-

1st Sgt. Michael J. Calkins Distinguished Honor Graduate Award

MP company dedicates award to late 1SG

by Brian Hill/Fort Leonard Wood Public Affairs Office

FORT LEONARD WOOD, MO — After positively impacting the lives of thousands of service members over the course of 18 years in the Army, 1st Sgt. Michael Calkins is still assisting in recognizing excellence — even after death.

Calkins, who passed away in 2015 while serving on active duty at Fort Leavenworth, was memorialized by the leaders of Company C, 701st Military Police Battalion, for the impact he made in the 31E military occupational specialty — Army Corrections/Detention Specialist — via a dedication of the company's standard distinguished honor graduate award.

That newly dedicated award was presented for the first time by members of Calkins' family during a Feb. 23, 2024, ceremony in Fort Leonard Wood's Nutter Field House for the soldiers and Marines graduating the company's corrections training course.

Calkins' widow, Debra, called the dedication "an incredible honor for him," although she said he would "absolutely hate it."

"He was extremely humble," she said. "Anytime he was recognized for anything, he was never saying 'thank you' for him; he was saying 'thank you' for his soldiers. He believed that anything and everything that he ever achieved was because of his family and because of his soldiers. He was all about the soldiers, from the time he woke up until the time he went to bed."

For those reasons and more, Charlie Company 1st Sgt. Chad Hickey said Calkins was the correct choice for this award's dedication.

"The Army has a rich history, and if we can dedicate an award to somebody who came before and somebody who led the way and meant something to the Army, it not only recognizes greatness, but it also pays honor to those who came before us and sets the example for us to follow," he said. "(Calkins) impacted thousands of soldiers over his career, and we felt the award was a great way to honor his dedication to both the Army and the MOS."

The inaugural recipient of the 1st Sgt. Michael J. Calkins Distinguished Honor Graduate Award was Marine Pfc. America Contreras, who, Hickey noted, had the highest GPA of the 86 service members graduating the class, along with being a first-time "go" on all evaluations and practical exercises.

Contreras, from Staunton, Virginia, said she joined the active-duty Marine Corps to gain experience, and her goal is to one day work in federal law enforcement.

"My mom, she worked in federal law enforcement," Contreras said. "I want to follow the same path."

The award "means a lot," Contreras added.

"I know a lot of the command here really admired the first sergeant, and I feel really honored to receive the award," she said.

After the ceremony, Debra spoke with Contreras, who will next move on to Camp Lejeune, North

"I just wanted her to know the type of person he was," Debra said. "The whole reason that he is getting this honor is because he was for his soldiers. They remember him; they remember the lessons he imparted; they remember the fights he had for them, the lessons he taught them."

As they spoke, Contreras visibly held back tears and tried to maintain her military bearing. The two women parted with a hug.

"I think it's very special," Contreras said of the moment. "I'm honored for them to be here."

Exchange, the child development center, the AMPO and so forth," added Gennaro Penn, retired Army Finance Corps regimental sergeant major and AMPO branch manager. "Now, they develop their skills, staying in our AMPO network, and we can use those skills for 20 years or more."

While increased readiness and employee satisfaction are huge measures of success for military organizations, perhaps the biggest impact of the policy is the support it provides to military families, which Army Secretary Christine Wormuth described as "the force behind the force."

"Military spouses are the rock upon which their families and military community depend," agreed Jennings, who spearheaded the policy. "Though they do not wear a uniform, they serve and strengthen our nation every day by supporting our soldiers and allowing them to focus on their mission."

While military spouses have been long lauded for their efforts on the home front, many also want to contribute to their community, military, families and personal career goals outside of the home.

"I left the military to start a family in 2014, had a baby and realized I wasn't cut out to be a stay-at-home mom," said Erin Wiegers, Fort Leavenworth AMPO military pay technician, who is married to Maj. Trevor Wiegers, a Mission Command Training Program observer coach/trainer at Fort Leavenworth.

Wiegers holds two degrees in criminal justice and homeland security, and she has military experience as a prior enlisted administrative specialist and former commissioned military police officer, which helped her quickly get her first civilian job at the on-base credit union at U.S. Army Garrison Bavaria, Germany.

In the years immediately following, her family PCS moved three times, and she had to find work in various fields including dental assisting, banking, veterinary services and early childhood education.

"I actually had to get a second part-time job at the child development center, so I could make the list for child care in order to work my main position at the veterinary clinic," Wiegers recalled. "That's often the life of an Army spouse.

"Being prior service, I just love the military; it's where I'm most comfortable," said the mother of two boys, ages 6 and 8. "I'd been out of the military for five years before someone recommended the military pay office, which was under (the Defense Finance and Accounting Service) at the time. I applied and was hired"

While Wiegers was able to find employment relatively quickly, many of the military spouses talked to said they struggle to find employment that is congruent with their unique circumstances.

"I always wanted a job, but it never fit in with what my husband's job would require and what fit in with the kids," recalled Hartwell, adding that she ran into struggles with the young age of her children, being able to afford child care, and then, finding something that would match her children's schedules.

"After my husband decided to commission, and I was able to find a part-time job with a (Department of Defense Education Activity) school, so I could work during school hours, which worked with the kids," she continued.

Both Wiegers and Hartwell said they kept searching for the right fit and both found that the military pay offices on base balanced both the needs of their families and their employment.

"When we got to JBLM, it just fit," said Hartwell, who started off as a part-time AMPO employee and has now transitioned to full time. "They were willing to work with me and be a little more flexible with me, which is what I needed."

If finding the right employment fit for a military spouse is hard, keeping that employment with the numerous moves military families make throughout a career can be next to impossible. That was until US-AFMCOM started its military spouse employment guarantee policy.

"When I worked other jobs, I was never guaranteed they were going to have a job for me when we moved," explained Hartwell. "With USAFMCOM, they said we are going to pay you what you were making with a job in line with what you were doing, not just shove me in a corner."

For many of USAFM-COM's military spouse employees, the idea of continuing their career progression on top of just having a job makes them work even harder for the Army and soldiers they serve.

"When I move, I'm not starting at the bottom of the barrel again – I'm not going backwards, I'm always going forward from here," Wiegers said. "That's very motivating, and the stability and the longevity that you find is really reassuring."

"It makes me want to push, because if I become a lead technician here, they will make me a lead technician there," agreed Hartwell. "I'm not going to have to restart at ground zero."

Additionally, the policy cuts red tape and makes it easy to transfer employment from one AMPO to the next.

"I let my Fort Campbell leadership know we were moving to Fort Leavenworth, and when we received the hard orders, they were able to get the ball rolling," Wiegers explained about her experience with the program. "The worst part was I had to fill out two documents.

"Without blowing smoke, it was great," she added. "I had nothing to stress about, and the losing and gaining directors really took care of me."

Resoundingly, those who've used the new program over the last 16 months agreed it provided a tremendous amount of stress relief.

"You've got a bazillion things going through your head with getting the family situated," Wiegers said. "Are the kids going to be happy, are we going to have a house, am I going to find a job in the civilian sector?

"But, one thing I knew when we moved this time is that I was going to have a job and my husband was going to have a job," she continued. "That peace of mind was absolutely fantastic."

That peace often transfers to the military member as well.

"My husband realizes it because we aren't stressing about saving more money because we are going to PCS, and it could take months for me to find a job after we move," Hartwell said. "And, for me, I want a job that's something I enjoy and not be miserable, and I have that now."

"It takes a huge load off my husband," confirmed Wiegers. "He's got enough to worry about being gone every couple months, and he knows now that if he does choose to continue in his career, I will be taken care of and that I'm very happy."

The spouses and command leaders that were interviewed all said they hope other organizations around the Army and Department of Defense take note of this program and use it as a template.

"It's long overdue," concluded Hartwell. "So many military spouses are smart, amazing and talented, and they would benefit from the same thing I have."

Commissary celebrates MOMC with drawing, writing contest

by Defense Commissary Agency Corporate Com-

FORT GREGG-ADAMS, Va. - The Defense Commissary Agency (DeCA) joins communities across the world in celebrating the Month of the Military Child in April.

For nearly 40 years, supporters from public and private organizations have come together for annual events and activities to honor military children and the sacrifices they make.

Young people growing up in military families understand the meaning of service before self," said Navy Command Master Chief Mario Rivers, senior enlisted advisor to the DeCA director. "Their courage and resilience inspire us all, and DeCA is proud to recognize the important role they play in military communities." Featured among DeCA's April events is the "Spreading Joy Around the World" drawing and writing contest for youth 18 years old and younger.

See page B2 of this week's issue of the Fort Leavenworth Lamp for information on upcoming Month of the Military Child events.

To enter the contest, children of authorized commissary patrons must submit a drawing or written description of a unique experience they have had as a military child.

Each store location will have one winner in the writing category and one in the drawing category, for a total of two winners per store location.

To visit corp.commissaries.com/military-childmonth and download the activity card. The webpage will be active April 1.

Entrants may also visit the customer service desk at their local commissary to obtain an activity card. Entries will be accepted at local commissary customer service desks April 1-30. There is a limit of one entry per child.

and last name of the artist/writer, age, email and phone number. Parents must also complete the accompanying photo release authorization form to display their child's work in the store if his/her submission

All entries must also include the first

Each store will determine whether the activity cards of the winners will be displayed. Late entrants or entrants without complete information as noted above will not be accepted. DeCA employees and their family members are not eligible to participate in the contest.

Each commissary is responsible for selecting winners and contacting them by phone or email. Winners will receive a prize by May 31, 2024. No purchase is necessary to enter or win.

By entering, participants grant DeCA and its industry suppliers full rights to use all materials and information. All entries become the property of DeCA and will not be acknowledged or returned. A copy of these rules and the activity card can be found at corp.commissaries.com/militarychild-month.

Commissary customers are encouraged to check with their local commissary store and corp.commissaries.com for other programs supporting the Month of the Military Child.

The Fort Leavenworth Lamp welcomes part-time volunteer REPORTERS and INTERNS!
